
Steps to your own design

If you've already searched all the stores or just want something unique, you might want to design your own prom dress. There are several steps you'll need to follow to make your own prom dress.

The Design

The first step is to come up with an actual design for your dress. Should you choose Pageant Dresses or Formal Dance Dresses? Spend some time browsing through fashion magazines for current styles. You can then use those styles to decide on the look of your dress or mix it up and go with a completely different trend to be really different and unique. For example, if you like A-Line Evening Dresses, you may want to sketch out the dress on paper. Be sure to include not only the design for the front and the back of the dress, but also the sides. If you are not artistic, it might be better to start in the fabric store with a book of prom dress patterns. Even if you choose Ball Gown Evening Dresses, you can make it uniquely yours with materials and embellishments. It is also unlikely that the majority of teens at the prom will have a hand-made dress, so a pre-made pattern will probably still be unique among your friends.

The Material

The type of material you choose can make a difference in the difficulty of sewing the finished piece. Some materials are naturally harder to work with than others. For example, silk can be very hard to sew and taffeta nearly impossible for a beginner. Be sure to consider the skill level of your seamstress or yourself when choosing the material. If necessary, take the seamstress to the material store with you. If you are hiring a seamstress from a local tailor, then you should consult with them on which materials they are used to working with and if there are any that create additional surcharges and how much.

The Color

Although it is tempting to choose a color that is unusual, remember that you will have to match shoes, jewelry and purse to the dress. That Pink Evening Dress that looks so attractive in the fabric store can become a nightmare when it comes to matching. However, if you really love the color, you can have shoes and purse dyed to match at high-end shoe retailers or you can always go with plain white or cream-colored accessories to match an unusual color. such as the Green Evening Dresses. If you plan to have shoes and purse dyed, allow plenty of time and get a good size sample of the material to leave at the shoe store.

The Sizing

Be sure that you try the dress on and have any alterations done at least two to three weeks before the big night. The last thing you want on prom night is a dress that is so tight you can't breathe or so long that you keep tripping on the hem.
