
I want to design my own wedding invitations.

Posted by Klondike - 2009/02/14 16:27

In just over six months my daughter is getting married. Now that she's set a date, I'm shopping for wedding invitations. I have seen many designs but can't find anything I like. Have you had any experience with ordering well-designed wedding invitations?

There are lots of sites on the internet that sell wedding invitations now, but some are better than others. My cousin used a company called www.MonogramWedding.com and was really happy with her invitations and response cards. You might give them a try.

Hello

Wedding invitation kits can be found in most office or paper supply stores. You just need to select your grade of paper, your computer font and color and your wedding invitations can be printed right off of your home computer. Feel free to dress your wedding invitations with ribbon, stamps or dried flowers for added effect.

Homemade Invitations - You must keep in mind that making your own invitations from scratch isn't for every bride. Paper for homemade wedding invitations can be found at stationary and arts and crafts stores - everything from simple ecru with embossed edges to recycled paper pressed with dried flowers and leaves. You can get a stationer to pen your wedding invitations with calligraphy, ask for the help of an artistic friend or do it on your own. Homemade invitations can be decorated with stamps, stickers, ribbons and even tissue paper to achieve the desired effect.
